Pilgrim Walks 7,000 Miles Dramatizing Peace Prayer

A modern-day pilgrim in blue slacks and tunic has arrived in Lincoln on a 10,000-mile walking journey for peace.

Peace Pilgrim, a gray-haired native of New Jersey, does not reveal her name. She completed 7,000 miles of walking when she arrived at the Nebraska Capitol. She came here from Iowa and will go to Kansas after speaking at 5:30 p.m. Sunday at the Church of the Brethren.

When she began her pilgrimage Peace Pilgrim had three petitions. Two of these, peace in Korea and a secretary of peace on the President's cabinet, have since become facts.

The specific prayer for which she is traveling now is for world disarmament and reconstruction.

Her vow is: "Until mankind has learned the way to peace, I shall remain a wanderer on the face of the earth—walking until I am given shelter, fasting until I am given food."

Nebraska has been friendly, Peace Pilgrim said. In the state she has slept out only two nights and has been provided with at least three meals a day.

While she is walking, Peace Pilgrim gives thanks to God and thinks about the goodness of her fellow human beings and the beauties of nature.

She said a pair of canvas rubber-soled shoes won't last 1,000 miles.

Peace Pilgrim started her journey with no money. She will not accept rides and plans to continue her journey "on foot and faith" until her petition for peace is granted.
